New York: Litigation: White-Collar Crime & Government Investigations

Brodsky, David (NY) - Band 2

The Firm: Of the ten subgroups that constitute Latham's litigation department, the securities and professional liability practice is famed for "producing extraordinary results." Benefiting from offices in Europe, the team is in an ideal position to keep abreast of developments in EU securities legislation as they impact on both foreign and domestic clients in single-party and class action disputes.

Closer to home, the firm scored a significant victory on behalf of Lehman Brothers, Bank of America and RBC Dain Rauscher in litigation arising from the premature termination of repackaged corporate debt security when Verizon New York ceased SEC filings.

The cross-fertilization of the securities and white-collar crime practices enables Latham to guide clients through the transition from civil to criminal proceedings that has come to characterize the US litigation marketplace.

The Lawyers: David Brodsky is equally at home in both major securities and white-collar disputes. As global chair of the securities litigation and professional liability practice, he has acquired a reputation in financial circles for "strategic insight and incredible persuasiveness." He has put his experience as general counsel at Credit Suisse to good use, taking the lead in the CIBC World Markets litigation and representing numerous other public companies and their executives.
